10.10-11.30 First session:

The situation of poverty today, different dimensions and the new forms of poverty

This session should address the different dimension of poverty and their impact on society and growth as well as the impact on poverty of the pandemic and the aggression war in Ukraine. According to the World Bank (World Bank, Global economic prospects, June 2021), “The pandemic not only reversed gains in global poverty reduction for the first time in a generation but also deepened the challenges of food insecurity and rising food prices for many millions of people. This is particularly prevalent among the poorest countries and populations, where higher prices of food can devastate discretionary incomes: [...] By the end of 2021, it is expected that about 100 million people across Emerging market and developing economies (EMDEs) will have fallen back into extreme poverty. The pandemic’s impact on poverty could reverberate for a prolonged period due to its scarring effects on long-term growth prospects. The pandemic has also exacerbated inequality as it has disproportionately affected vulnerable groups-including women, children, and unskilled and informal workers.”.

11.45-13.00 Second session:

The role of businesses and finance in reducing poverty, ESG and new model of the labor market

This session should address the role of sustainable finance and firms to eradicate poverty around the world. Sustainable Finance and sustainability-focused enterprises have a crucial role in the fight against poverty as they tend to be oriented by a long-term vision. To become sustainable requires important changes in strategic objectives, business models, production processes, human resource management, leadership styles; the world of work is also affected. These are all aspects that will be examined in this session.

13.00-14.00 Lunch

14.30-16.00 Third session:

The role of Governments and Institutions to tackle poverty, the greater importance of preventive actions compared to redistributive ones

This session should be devoted to address the issue of the concrete actions the international and national communities should adopt to promote a fairer economic-financial order, capable for example of providing finance for poor countries so to favor their post-Covid development. COVID-19 has hit poor and vulnerable countries the hardest, threatening decades of hard-won gains while exacerbating existing inequalities in the poorest countries. Attention will also be paid to the theme of peace, which is closely connected to that of poverty. How to pursue and guarantee peace in the world?

A further problem to be addressed refers to a just sustainable transition especially in poor countries, e.g. in Africa. One of the unintended consequences of the Covid-19 pandemic has been Western governments and companies starting to push a decarbonization agenda. However, if they push too hard, African countries could be denied the energy required for their industrialization processes.

The problem therefore is how to combine the process towards environmental sustainability with the need to protect the poorest and most vulnerable people and nations.
